—The Mattie furnace in Girard was blown in Monday after being idle for several months.

—Read the business announcements of wide-awake merchants in today's Dispatch and gain much valuable information.

—In renewing his subscription, W. F. Kistler of Loristown, writes: "After taking The Dispatch some thirty odd years, I would indeed be lonesome without it."

—Another endeavor will be made this session of the legislature, to get the statute against Sunday base ball repealed and one passed that will permit of Sunday games.

—John Hartman, a pioneer resident of North Lima, died last week at the advanced age of 84 years. He is survived by seven children. Funeral services were held Friday.

—Prof. F. E. Ostrander of the Warren high school has declared war on dealers who sell tobacco in any form to boys under lawful age. It is claimed that all users of the weed make the fact known by grades received in class work.

—Great interest is shown in union evangelistic meetings being held in Lisbon. At the Presbyterian church last Sunday night nearly one thousand people were in attendance and many could not gain admission to the building. A unanimous resolution was adopted asking the legislature not to make the Deane bill a law.

—The delinquent tax list which is printed in today's Dispatch is the shortest this county has had for many years, due to the fact that the books of the treasurer were kept open this year nearly a month later than in the past. It will be noted that in some townships there is not a single delinquent, Canfield being among them.

—George Dana Adams of Cleveland, formerly of Warren, is on his third business trip around the world. On Christmas day he was at Yokohama, on the Japan Islands, and he spent New Year's day at Manila, on the Philippine Islands, where he has a branch office under the management of his nephew, Lee Parsons. Both Parsons and Adams have relatives in Warren and Youngstown.

—The Union Banking company of Columbiana at its annual meeting elected the following directors: R. Lehman, Jacob Dettwiler, S. W. Tidd, Jerry Shontz, G. Ed. Buzzard, Dr. H. Bookwalter, J. J. —Edison says the work of the farmer will be much simplified in the years to come. He will be a man on a seat beside a push button and some levers and his plowing, harrowing, cultivating and gathering of crops will be done very easily compared to what they now are. The present implements will seem primitive and all modern implements will be run by storage batteries. When that time comes all days will be happy days down on the farm and the boys will not need to be coaxed to stay at home.

—The Kent Courier last week contained the following interesting paragraph: When the Portage county grand jury rose at Ravenna a few days ago they reported but one indictment. That was against an Italian for forgery. The recently published report of the Ohio penitentiary for the year ending last October shows but two arrivals from Portage county. The record of the mayor's court in Kent and of the justice courts, too, show a remarkable decline. Marshal Carlisle finds but little to do in the matter of arrests. This condition, which is said to prevail in Ravenna and other towns is being pointed to by the advocates of temperance as one of the results of a dry county.

—The man referred to in the following from the Lisbon Patriot is the one who some time since broke into the Ridge church, on the Canfield-Salem road, in Green township, and carried away a lot of furnishings which were recovered when his home was searched by officers for other plunder; Anna L. Henry has sued John Henry in common pleas court for a divorce on the ground that he is imprisoned in the penitentiary. She also asks to be restored to her maiden name of Anna L. Kraft. The couple were married March 5, 1904, and have no children. Henry lived in West township for many years where he was known as the outlaw of the community. He was convicted of burglary and larceny during the September term of common pleas court and was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary by Judge Harter. He lived near Bayard. Mrs. Henry, it is said, is making Canton her home.

THE ROSE LAW.

(The Ravenna Republican.)

There may be a chance for an honest difference of opinion as to the inherent goodness or badness of the Rose law, but it seems to us that there is only one side to the question as to whether the operation of the law has been a benefit or a detriment to Portage county. We shall confine our observations to Ravenna as we know most about the conditions here and we are bringing up the matter at this time only because there is grave danger of the Rose law being repealed by a democratic legislature.

There are many reasons why we believe the Rose law has been and is a benefit to Ravenna. We shall mention just a few of them.

The general appearance of the town is better. Take West Main street for instance. Do you remember how it looked with a row of saloons on either side? Would you care to go back to the old condition?

Then there is the matter of drunkenness on the streets. Can an intoxicated man be classed as a pleasant person to see or to meet? Do you recall how frequently you saw them three years ago and do you realize how seldom you see one now?

Right along in this connection might be mentioned the general conditions of the town from the standpoint of the police department. Before the Rose law went into operation the policemen had their hands more than full in dealing with law breakers and disturbers of the peace. Now one officer suffices and he kicks because he has nothing to do.

What are the conditions throughout the county now in this respect? We will quote from The Republican of January 6:

"In his charge to the grand jury Judge Robinson remarked to its members that since the enforcement of the local option laws there has been very little work for grand juries to do in Portage county; and when that honorable body arose with a record of one indictment the assertion fitted nicely with the demonstrated conditions."

Take business conditions in Ravenna. Never was such a December business done here according to the testimony of nearly all the merchants. This may or may not be because of the absence of saloons but the saloons are gone and the business is here. There is no doubt in our mind we would also call attention to the fact that there are no empty store rooms in Ravenna but on the contrary a number of new business blocks and store rooms have been constructed and are now occupied.

We shall have nothing to say here for or against the consumption of alcoholic liquor. This is, perhaps, a chance for an argument as to the good or bad effects of a temperate use of the same. There can be no argument for the intemperate use of it. Now while the abolition of the open saloon does not stop the use of liquor it checks to a great degree the misuse of it and that is certainly an advantage to everybody. We have had some blind tigers and may have some yet. There has been more or less bootlegging. There have been large quantities of liquor shipped into Ravenna by express and by freight. Cuyahoga Falls is given a generous patronage but, on the whole, the liquor that is consumed now is consumed more temperately than before.

What will happen if the Deane law should pass in its present form? Kent will become "wet" immediately and Ravenna will remain "dry." Just contemplate for a few moments what that would mean to Ravenna. We shall make no comment upon it. One more point. The Deane law is not necessary for two reasons. First, if the people want the saloons back in those counties from which they have been abolished they can have them in one year from now by the operation of the Rose law itself. They can be voted in just as they were voted out. Second, there is to be a constitutional convention in the near future which, in all probability, will deal with the liquor question in the state of Ohio and settle it for many years to come. That being the case it will not be worth while to put any new legislation on the statute book now.

To sum up. If you want the Deane law killed, write your representative and state senator about it. That is all you can do but it may help.

"FIGHTING DISTRICT ATTORNEY"

Charles S. Whitman, of New York County, Was a Student in Canfield When the College Was Founded. His Witty Stories of Local History.

Youngstown men who received the annual report of the Ohio Society of New York a few days ago, made a discovery. In turning its pages and scanning the addresses which are printed there, they came to the words, "Mahoning County," and in reading further they found an account of Canfield Normal College in the eighties. They were still more surprised to find that the address was by Charles S. Whitman, district attorney of New York, and that Mr. Whitman himself had spent his boyhood in Canfield this county.

A word about Mr. Whitman. He took office a year ago and in twelve months has acquired the nickname of the "fighting district attorney." During his first year in office he prosecuted as many cases and won as many convictions as District Attorney William Travers Jerome, whom the Thaw trial made famous.

Edward S. Walton lends the Vindicator the book in which Mr. Whitman's address is printed. The part that refers to Canfield follows. Mr. Whitman has been saying that there is a college on every hill top in Ohio—so many colleges, in fact, that he once heard an enthusiastic gentleman declare that there are as many colleges in Ohio as there are in all the other states of the Union put together.

"I know one down in Mahoning county at which I fitted for college, which came into existence very suddenly. Our good friends in Youngstown, as the city grew and waxed great—the Robbers Along the Mahoning, as we called them—stole the county seat from Canfield and left us with a very commodious and a very empty court house on our hands. There were several mills and there were more churches than there were inhabitants after the county seat left us. And so the good citizens gathered together and declared that there was one thing all the other towns around us had that we had not, but we had room for it, and that was a college. And so, almost over night it sprang into being there in the old court house, full-fledged, with a president and faculty, and a college yard, and college songs, and a few students, of whom I was one, a college which is still doing business out in Mahoning county, in the old building that once responded to the legal pleas of Whittlesey, and Giddings, and Benjamin F. Wade, and James A. Garfield, and many others whose names are household words in Ohio. So you see, gentlemen, I became attached to a court house pretty early in life, and I haven't been able to get away from it yet. But there is this to say about the old court houses out there, they built them to stay, the walls did not crack and open and the buildings did not give evidence that they were going to fall down. If you will call at my office at the corner of Franklin and Elm streets, or here at a place I believe it is now, I will show you an example of a different kind of architecture."

Under the heading, "A Fighting District Attorney," the Outlook, just after Mr. Whitman was elected, printed a picture of him, together with a sketch of his life and some high praise. Mr. Whitman had already acquired a reputation as a fighter while serving as judge of the court of general sessions in New York, a position to which Gov. Hughes appointed him. This is what the Outlook said: "His judicial record is a fine one and in many instances he displayed a courageous support of justice, honor and integrity in performing his duties. In the face of the political and personal influence which is too often brought to bear upon criminal court judges. Mr. Whitman is a man of high personal character and broad human sympathies as well as first-rate legal attainments. He works well with other men, and takes the point of view and the opinions of his colleagues into consideration when forming a judgment, but when his judgment is once formed he pursues it unwaveringly. If he once gets on the track of a lawbreaker from whom he believes society or social or personal or commercial 'power behind the throne' is likely to divert him a hair's breadth from what he conceives to be his duty. As his standards of personal ethics are high, we expect to see him measuring malefactors of great wealth or of great political power by the same standards."

"Who's Who in America" gives the following facts about Whitman's career: Charles Seymour Whitman, lawyer; born at Norwich, Conn., Aug. 28, 1868; son of John Seymour and Lillie (Arne) Whitman; A. B. Amherst, 1890, L. L. B., New York university, 1894. (Hon. M. A. Williams, 1904) married Olive Hitchcock of New York, Dec. 22, 1908. Assistant corporation counsel of New York, 1903; member and later president of the board of city magistrates, New York, 1904-7; judge court of General Sessions, New York, by appointment of Governor Hughes, 1907; district attorney of New York county, since Jan. 1, 1910. Republican, Presbyterian, President anti-policy society of New York, trustee New York Skin and Cancer hospital, New York Probation association, Mason.

Mr. Whitman told the Ohio society more about his early life.

"I believe," he said, "that I represent in my humble self as much of Ohio tradition as any man in this room. I was not born in Ohio, like many of you, and many of your ancestors, but I was born where I am credited informed Ohio was born—in Connecticut. And like Eliza Whitteley and Moses Cleveland and others from my native state, I emigrated early to Ohio. It was my good fortune, but I was in no way responsible for it. You know the families of country ministers often have unusual opportunities of travel. And I know all about the country school houses of Ohio, of which you have heard very little tonight, but of which you have heard a great deal at former gatherings of this kind."

I was first politically active at the age of seven, in Ohio, when with some other young rogues in the primary school I got out and threw rocks and mud at a political banner which was thrown out to the breeze opposite our schoolhouse by a political organization to which my father did not belong. I was impressed mentally and physically, more physically than mentally, immediately thereafter, with the truth of the proposition which I most thoroughly believe in, now, and I learned then a lesson which I have since tried not to forget, that mud slinging has no place in a political campaign in America. The banner to which I refer bore the legend, 'Tilden and Hendricks, Peace and Reform.' I was too young then to recognize the significance of the juxtaposition of the two words Reform and Pain. I could tell you all about it now. I went through my first year in college in the Western Reserve university, known as Adelbert college, and to some of you whose hairs are whitening now, as Old Hudson."

Lowrey Must Serve Sentence.

Columbus—Charles Lowrey, alias Charles A. Taylor, member of the famous Blinkey Morgan gang which for ten years terrorized northern Ohio, must serve out his ten-year term in the penitentiary. Governor Harmon tonight announced his rejection of the pardon board's recommendation for Lowrey's pardon.

The long criminal record of Lowrey was against him. The Governor went into it thoroughly and decided that, although Lowrey has been a model prisoner and now is an old man, he would be a dangerous man to be given liberty.

Besides, the crime for which he was convicted in 1901, the dynamiting of the Citizens' Bank, of Chardon, and other crimes committed as a member of the Morgan gang, the Governor found Lowrey once had served a term in the Pennsylvania penitentiary for a robbery in Seloto, Pa., that he had been implicated in a $5,000 burglary in Galt, Ont., and a $10,000 jewelry robbery in Montreal. Moreover, two murders were charged to Lowrey's account, the governor was informed.

Lowrey and his pal, Joseph Gallagher, were sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years for the Chardon job, which was unsuccessful. Lowrey made a startling escape, however, in November of the same year, when he returned to Columbus on a train after being taken away to testify in the trial of a companion. Two men, boarded the train near Westerville, threw pepper in the guard's face, pulled Lowrey off with them and escaped. He was captured in Cleveland in 1905. Because of the loss of good time of this escape his term will not expire till March 11, 1912.
